Shown here are the fifteen cities with land in the watershed, as well as the major roads that serve to link the people and goods that move between them. Land not contained within the cities is considered to be outside of the Urban Growth Area, a boundary that is intended to prevent rural and resource areas from being developed for urban uses. Human population growth, however, is applying pressure to this growth boundary, as the Puget Sound Region is expected to grow by more than a million people (27%) by 2040 (PSRC).
